Picnic day-Friendship Day

Last Friday we enjoyed a picnic lunch with our surprise guest for the day – Mrs Lord. Mrs Lord is a casual teacher whom the students haven't seen for a long time and I know that they really enjoy having her teach them.

Mrs Lord sent me a message Friday afternoon saying what a wonderful day she had with everyone and to thank parents for sending in something to share. She also said that teaching our students was always a delight.

Students listened to the story 'Rosie's Really a Country Dog' and then created a postcard from a dog to them.

Students made a page for friendship where other students wrote what they liked about them on it.

At one stage, Mrs Lord turned into a robot and students had to tell her how to make a fruit kebab. Lots of laughs with that one! The students soon worked out how important explicit instructions are.

Fun friendship games for sport in the afternoon ended a great day of learning.

Our Ant study

Yesterday we plotted our results collected over the week, into a graph. Students then analysed the results, compared them to their original predictions and gave reasons for the outcomes. A few students had to add a dotted line to their graphs representing interference by a chicken, but this is part and parcel of a scientific experiment and also highlights the importance of conducting more than one test.

What we hypothesized regarding the types of seeds the ants would eat didn't happen. The data also showed that where the experiments were placed made a big difference to what was eaten as well.

Dear Ava,
Hi Skunky, here from Japan.
I was walking along the street about to go to the hot springs, when these Japanese pap idols came up to me and offered me a job as a model for their band. Of course I agreed because I thought it would be fun and exciting. But when we arrived at their office, I was put into these itchy clothes. Once the photoshoot was done I went home. The next day I was swarmed with paparazzi and a limo pulled up and took me to visit the Emperor of Japan. It was really awkward...
Yours sincerely,
Skunky ♥

It will be interesting to find out how are experiment compared to other school's results and the conclusions overall.

Tomorrow I will be at school but spending the day in a Zoom meeting with other Principals and our Director for Professional Learning, Mrs Houlden will be on class.
